1. INTRODUCTION

1.1. This article \(1\) will deal with the continued presence in Tamil, from its earliest observable condition upto the present situation, \(2\) of a class of words or, more precisely, a class of expressions that I shall designate here as "ideophones". In using this term, I am, to the best of my knowledge, following the steps of Asher[1985], although the data I am examining here is very different from his, because I shall concentrate on the early periods, mostly accessible only through written records, whereas he is presenting 20th century contemporary Tamil, a living language, with living native speakers.

As will be seen on several occasion, when I shall attempt to formulate characterizations of ideophones, the use of this terminology is inspired by an implicit typological perspective, although, in this article, I shall stick to Tamil linguistic data from various periods, endeavouring at the same time to determine also how this data was natively perceived by those Tamil scholars who had assigned to themselves the task of describing their language, mostly in its learned variety.

1.2. The main features in the characterization of ideophones for Modern Tamil found in Asher[1985, p. 242] are:

(A) "[...] uninflected onomatopoeic forms [...] normally followed by the quotative particle -ṇṇu, the whole expression generally functioning as an adverb. [...] Reduplication is common. [...] The set is at least to some extent an open one [...]"

He then proceeds to give as a sample a list of 28 items accompanied by glosses. The items (without the glosses) are: (1) kalakala-ṇṇu [A1], kirukiru-ṇṇu [A2], koḷakoḷa-ṇṇu [A3], krīc-ṇṇu [A4], gaṇagaṇa-ṇṇu [A5], gupgup-ṇṇu [A6], caṭ-ṇṇu [A7], caṭār-ṇṇu [A8], curuk-ṇṇu [A9], calacala-ṇṇu [A10], coḷacoḷa-ṇṇu [A11], jilujilu-ṇṇu [A12], ṭakku-ṇṇu [A13], ṭakār-ṇṇu [A14], ṇaṇṇu-ṇṇu [A15], taḷataḷa-ṇṇu [A16], diṭṭir-ṇṇu [A17], narunaru-ṇṇu [A18], pacapaca-ṇṇu [A19], paṭapaṭa-ṇṇu [A20], paṭṭir-ṇṇu [A21], paḷapaḷa-ṇṇu [A22], pilupilu-ṇṇu [A23], maṭamaṭa-ṇṇu [A24], muṇumuṇu-ṇṇu [A25], vaḷavaḷa-ṇṇu [A26], vāḷvāḷ-ṇṇu [A27], veṭuveṭu-ṇṇu [A28]).

In addition to that, the syntactic behaviour is illustrated by two examples, one sentence with the ideophone kupukupu-ṇṇu [A29] and one with the ideophone diṭṭir-ṇṇu [A17], which is:

(2) avan diṭṭir-ṇṇu veḷiye ooṭanaan

he ideo-qp outside run-past-3sm

"He suddenly ran outside"

My main purpose being, in this article, to set the focus, as soon as possible, on elements partly similar to these in Ancient Tamil, I shall in the remaining part of the introduction, comment briefly on the elements contained in the (A) characterization (see above), with a forward-looking anticipatory point of view.

1.3 The most difficult term to comment is probably "onomatopoeic". Although everybody who has been exposed to linguistic literature has probably an intuition of what the use of this term suggests, that intuition is probably difficult to share faithfully between two persons who do not have the same mother-tongue. A term frequently encountered in explanations about what "onomatopoeic" means is "expressive", like for instance in the following passage where Apte[1968] refers to a seminal study by Edward Sapir[1929] in the following terms: Although SAPIR has no general discussion on the usefulness of the terms 'echo-words' or 'onomatopoeic words' he has described in detail in his article 'A study in phonetic symbolism' the experiment he carried out to find how far the 'expressive' symbolism existed in any language apart from the 'referential' symbolism which is the very essence of linguistic form. The results of his experiments according to him go far to support the theory that such an 'expressive' symbolism does exist. [Apte, 1968, p.5]

1.4. Another important feature of many (but not all) ideophones as mentioned in (A) is the "Reduplication". And indeed, among the 29 ideophones mentioned in Asher[1985], 20 show internal reduplication. An important study, Malten[1989] lists 229 different "reduplizierte verbstämme" (reduplicated verb-stems) and, apparently, most of the 20 reduplicated ideophones of Asher[1985] can, with a few adjustments, appear as realisations of one of them, in adverbial position. For instance, item A1 alias kalakala-ṇṇu, glossed by "rustling sound" in Asher, corresponds to item M12 in Malten. \(3\) in Malten's list. There is however a difference of perspective, because Malten's object of study is the root, which stands in fact as a common factor to many linguistic items belonging to various periods, \(4\) whereas Asher describes a homogeneous variety of 20th century Tamil. This difference of approach reflects in the phonetic appearance of items: one striking case is A5, alias gaṇagaṇa-ṇṇu (glossed by "feverishness"), which has M6, alias kaṇakaṇa-v-eṇṇu, \(5\) in its third meaning ("fiebern"), for its corresponding item in the more formal variety of Tamil on which much of Malten's study is based. \(6\)

However, concerning the phenomenon of reduplication itself, we shall see while examining the classical literature testimony, that it is not a feature very clearly present in the ideophones from the most ancient period, and that it becomes visible only later, approximately from the Tēvāram onwards.

1.5. A third dimension to be considered in Asher's characterization \(7\) is the set of features that describe the morphology and the syntactic behaviour of ideophones in contemporary Tamil as "uninflected [...] forms, normally followed by the quotative particle -ṇṇu, the whole expression generally functioning as an adverb". This characterization is to some extent ambiguous, because the use of "followed by" in it leaves unresolved the question of what is examined here. To take one concrete example, is it diṭṭir which is called an ideophone? or is it "the whole expression" diṭṭir-ṇṇu? The solution adopted by me in this article is the second alternative. In this I am following the usage of the Cre-A Dictionnaire of contemporary Tamil (1992), which lists tiṭṭir-eṇṇu \(8\) as an entry head and characterizes it as an adverb (viṇai aṭai). \(9\)

Going one step further, I shall now note that the Madras Tamil Lexicon (MTL), uses a special name, or quotation form, for its corresponding entry, which is tiṭireṇal. The reason is that in the varieties of Tamil for which the MTL is useful, a set of 2 possible forms can be met with: {tiṭireṇa, tiṭireṇru}. \(10\)

The need to have a citation form for referring to a linguistic item is here seen to arise from the presence of an inflection system for this item. And we shall indeed see that one of the main differences between the situation of ideophones in contemporary Tamil, as illustrated by Asher, and the situation which we shall describe for ancient Tamil, in the next section, is that ideophones appear as complex verbal expressions \(11\) that can be inflected, some of them having in their attested paradigm quite a number of forms. \(12\) For instance, the item pull-eṇal which will be mentioned later, is quite frequent in Ancient Tamil where it appears under 7 different forms, listed in this set: {pullen, pullena, pullenru, pullenra, pullenraṇai, pullenraṇru}. And I shall argue that this item, along with several others, belongs in Classical Tamil to a natural class of terms, which has in the course of time, through successive changes, become the natural class which was characterized in (A).

2. IDEOPHONES IN TAMIL: SEARCHING THE TAMIL LEXICON

2.1. I shall now try to get closer to my goal of describing ideophones in Ancient Tamil, and for that purpose, I shall extend Asher[1985]'s criteria so as to be able to use them for an exploration of the most comprehensive description of Tamil vocabulary which is available to-day, namely the MTL. This exploration should be considered as a preliminary exploration, and it will be followed in section 3. by an exploration directly based on the corpus of Ancient Tamil literature itself.

Regarding the justification for basing a preliminary exploration on the MTL, I shall remark, as a partial answer to possible objections, that it is well known that the MTL is not the dictionary of a definite variety of Tamil (like the Cre-A dictionary of contemporary Tamil already mentioned); it is rather a "plural dictionary", expected to be usable with the literatures of all periods, from the beginning to the modern period. \(13\) This is my reason for making its exploration a starting point.

The object of our attention, in this section 2., is defined by the following remarks:

- (R1) A subset of 646 entries inside the MTL(14) appear to contain terms that are instances of a general template described here by means of the formula X-*en*al, and, except in 7 occasions (where variants are mentioned), (15) the *X-en*al form is the entry head.
- (R2) Inside the text that explains the meaning of the 639 remaining entries, the technical term "onom." occurs 320 times, very often in the combination "onom. expr."
- (R3) However it sometimes happens case that one entry is defined as "onom. expr." in one of its meanings and as "expr.", or "expression", or "phrase", in another meaning, like for instance the following examples: parakuparakeṇal (1. expr. signifying utter perplexity; 2. onom. expr. of scratching sound). We have already noted (in section 1.3) that a precise and universal characterization of what is "onomatopoeic" is probably impossible. Therefore, the primary focus in our brief description of these items will be on their phonological features, and the semantic characterizations will tend to be broad.

2.2 Nothing can of course replace a detailed examination of the 639 entries, but the first items in alphabetical order (along with the meaning given by the MTL) will already illustrate the morphological and the semantic variety involved:

- MTL1. akkaṭāveṇal
"onom. expr. of repose, non-interference";
- MTL2. *accen*al
"onom. expr. of swiftness";
- MTL3. acaṭṭuppicāṭṭeṇal
"behaving foolishly, stupidly";
- MTL4. *amm*enal
1. "onom. expr. of filling or overflowing, as of water";
2. "onom. expr. of humming";
- MTL5. *aluvalu*enal
"unceasing chatter").
- MTL6. *avvaḷavilavaṇmakil*kaveṇal
"maxim of satisfying the opponent by accepting his earlier position with a view to refute his further arguments (tuṣyatudurjana-nyāya)
- MTL7. *avakkavak*enal
1. "onom. expr. of being hasty, of leaping, galloping"
2. "onom. expr. of sounding explosively"
- MTL8. *avukkavuk*enal
"onom. expr. of haste, as in eating, running"
and so on (see [APPENDIX B, for the full list)]

As is well known, the primary function, as a free form, of eṇal, which we have until now only alluded to, describing it as a quotative verb, is to introduce reported speech. We have, to some extent, an example of that primary function in example MTL6, which is a maxim and could be translated as:

To say "Let him be happy up to that point".

[avvaḷavil "up to that point"; avaṇ "he"; maḱiḷka "let (him) be happy; eṇal "to say"]

However, inside the list which we are examining here, this is an exceptional situation which seems to be met with at the most 7 times. (16) and in the case of the remaining 632 entries, it does not make much sense, except if we want to produce a (not very useful) literal translation, to treat eṇal as an ordinary verbum dicendi. For instance, item MTL1, akkaṭāveṇal, which would literally translate as "to-say AKKAṬĀ", means in fact "to keep to oneself (so as not to interfere in other people's businesses)". 2.3. Grouping together the elements that have been seen up to this point, I shall propose the following characterisation:

(CI) Tamil vocabulary contains a group of idiomatic X-eṇal phrases, the formation of which is based on the verbum dicendi eṇal "to say". That group contains the vast majority of the 632 items which we have just now delimited. It is divided in subgroups that follow various phonological patterns (to be described in section 2.4), a frequent one being internal reduplication. These words are often described as being "onomatopoeic". A possible designation for this morphologically recognizable class is the technical term "ideophone" which has been used by typologists for the description of analogous phenomenon in other languages, although no two languages are absolutely similar in this respect.

2.4. I shall now proceed (in a sketchy way) to the morphological characterization of the various recognizable groups and subgroups inside the class of what I shall, from now onwards, call "Tamil ideophones". The vast majority of those ideophones belongs to one of three main groups: Group 1, alias "S group" (235 simple items, without reduplication), Group 2 alias "R group" (300 items with reduplication) and Group 3, alias "E group" (71 items with echo reduplication, also called substitutive reduplication). Apart from these three groups that correspond to the three columns of Chart 1 (see below), I have set aside a few elements that are listed in Appendix A as members of two small groups: Group 4 (alias "P group": 7 items) and Group 5 (alias "M group": 12 items). Those items shall be examined later. The total number of Tamil ideophones that appear in Chart 1 is thus 606.

2.5. Three expressive strategies

The use of an ideophone adds to the expressiveness of the speech utterance where it appears. As a matter of fact, ideophones have been designated as "expressives" by many linguists. \(17\) I would now like to briefly comment on the various strategies (in the guise of morphological devices) that are to be found illustrated by the various groups of words that are mentioned (by means of a subgroup reference number, like 1a, 1b, 1c, ..., 2a, 2b, ...) \(18\). I believe it is to be emphasized that individual words have, to express it metaphorically in an anthropomorphic way, a gregar character, a group behaviour, and that fashions are a reality. I will therefore, in this section, describe groups of words. (19)

Much has already been written on the expressive value of reduplication (20) as seen in the R group (middle column in the chart). It is therefore not necessary to add more here. The expressive strategy seen in the E groupe (third column in the chart), has also been commented upon. (21) But less attention has probably been given to the strategy which is used in what appears, from a historical point of view, to be the primary group of ideophones, the S group. Although it contains a good third (235 out of 613) of the items mentioned by the MTL (see chart 1), it cannot in fact compete, in terms of frequency in modern Tamil, with the R group. Many of the items listed by the MTL are in fact archaic. But we shall see (in section 3) that at an early stage it seems to have been the only extant (and thus the original) group of ideophones. Interestingly, a line in a sūtra in the Collatikāram, second book of Tolkāppiyam, possibly contains a clue to the original expressive value of the S group. It reads:

vārā marapiṇa varak kūrutal-um eṇṇā marapiṇa v-eṇak kūrutal-um aṇṇavai y-ellām avarṛ-avarṛ-iyalpāṇ iṇṇa v-eṇṇum kuṛipp-rai y-ākum (22)
(Tolk. Col, sūtra 422 in Cēṇāvaraiyar's commentary)

The suspicion that such a sūtra possibly deals with the expressive value brought by the eṇal component to the X-eṇal expressives of the S group seems to be reinforced by the fact that Cēṇāvaraiyar disagrees with Iḷampūraṇar's interpretation of the sūtra. After offering his own examples (which interestingly show some reduplicated items) (23), he rejects two examples which are attributed to Iḷampūraṇar:

(3) nilam vallenṛatu
"the soil was firm" (litt. "the soil said-STRONG")
(4) nīr taṇṇeṇṛatu
"the water was fresh" (litt. "the water said-COLD")

His argument for rejecting the examples is that here the value of eṇal is not "to say". Thus the items (soil and water) cannot be said to not say something. We could not have asked for a better confirmation that eṇal has a special auxiliant role inside vallenal (=MTL536, Appendix B) and taṇṇenal (=MTL288, Appendix B). Both these items are of course members of the S group: they are found inside group (1a). It will also appear soon, that they belong to the most ancient detectable layer inside the group of ideophones, as will be seen presently in section 3, where they can be found as items I-3 and I-15 in Chart 2.

2.6. What is an ideophone? At this stage, and before starting section 3 which will be devoted to Ancient Tamil, it has not seemed out of place to quote the characterization of ideophones from a general linguistics point of view, by a typologist: the following broad characterization of "ideophones" by Hagège[1993] seems indeed to fit the Tamil situation well:

Another aspect of the lexicon whose study is in order here are ideophones. This label applies to words whose structure presents some characteristics comparable to those found in onomatopoeia. Ideophone-making, though, does not necessarily imply an effort to dodge the law which establishes an arbitrary relationship between meanings and sounds. Rather, ideophone-making is a picturesque and vivid way of expressing perceptible (visual, auditory, tactile, etc.) properties of living beings and objects, mental characteristics, or various types of motions. From a syntactic point of view, ideophones are mostly adverbs, or, less commonly, adjectives or nouns. [Hagège, 1993, p.23-24]

3. IDEOPHONES IN ANCIENT TAMIL: AN INVENTORY

3.1. We are now ready to establish the most comprehensive list which we shall be able to make for Ancient Tamil. The method will not be modified: we are still looking for expressions that can be viewed as instances of the X-eṇal template. The only difference is that we are no longer exploring the body of the MTL but the corpus of Ancient Tamil poetry, (24) in which are recognized, on linguistic grounds, several temporal strata. (25) For these reasons, the preliminary investigation has been restricted to the poems belonging to 6 of the anthologies that are part of that corpus: Akanāṇūru (=AK), Naṟṟiṇai (=NA), Kuṟuntokai (=KU), Puṟanāṇūru (=PU), Aiṅkuṟunūru (=AI) and Patirṟuppattu (=PA). The group as a whole will be referred to as ET1. It consists of circa 2180 poems of various length, totally approximately 23000 lines. In a second stage, the search for ideophones is continued through later texts.

3.2. The first application of the search pattern to the 23000 lines of the ET1 corpus yields the various forms of the 23 ideophones that are listed in Chart 2 (see below) and that constitute the most ancient directly visible layer of what the system of ideophones may have been at an earlier stage. Among these 23 different ideophones, some can be met with quite frequently (the most frequent occurs 49 times), and some are very rare (the 4 least frequent occur only once, and one occurrence is dubious), the total number of occurrences being 284. (26) The data is summed up in the following two-dimensional chart, where I indicate, by decreasing global frequency, the number of occurrences in each of the 6 anthologies of each of the 23 ideophones. For the sake of commodity, a serial number has been assigned to each of them, based on their frequency. For instance, the ideophone taṇṇeṇal will be referred to as I-3, because it is the third most frequent in the ET1 corpus. (27)

3.3. As is evident from Chart 1, there are some differences between the 6 anthologies, notably in terms of frequency. The core subset (marked in boldface inside Chart 1) can profitably be examined in detail, in order to make a more precise assessment of the syntactic behaviour of ideophones. The differences between the anthologies are made more apparent if we relate the number of ideophones in each anthology with its size. The results for the 6 anthologies appearing in Chart 1 and for a few other texts are summarized in the following chart.

Chart 3: Some classical texts ordered by decreasing frequency of ideophones

(See Chart 1 for precise data on KU, AK, NA, PU, AI and PA)

The figures given in this chart could be expected to tell us something about the internal chronology of this literature. The traditional view is that the most ancient part of the corpus consists of the so-called Eṭṭuttokai (28) and Pattuppāṭṭu. (29) and that Kuṟaḷ and Nālaṭi are later works. However, we see on Chart 1 that the anthology having the smallest frequency is the Paripāṭal, which belongs to the Eṭṭuttokai and which contains only one ideophone. On the other hand, the Kalittokai contains more frequently ideophones than AI and PA. Since it is generally admitted, on other linguistic grounds, that, inside the Eṭṭuttokai, Kalittokai and Paripāṭal are later than the other 6 anthologies (30), the hope to help establishing an absolute chronology is to be replaced by the possibility to characterize stylistically some texts as conservative and others as innovative. The more solid fact seems to be that it will probably make sense to study as a homogeneous whole a corpus of texts comprising KU, AK, NA, PU and Pattuppāṭṭu when we want to examine the syntactic behaviour of ideophones. \(31\)

3.3. As a complement to our examination of the morphology of ideophones in Classical Tamil, it should be reminded that the items that appear in the X-eṇal column of chart 1 are only citation forms (or dictionary entries). The real forms, those that do occur in the poems of these anthologies are listed in the rightmost column of chart 2. \(32\) For instance, kalleṇal that appears next to I-1 is a citation forms (but never occurs in a real text) whereas the real occurrences are kalleṇa, kalleṇ, kalleṇṛa & kalleṇṛaṇṛu listed at the end of the line along with a figure that indicates how many times they are seen in the 4 anthologies.

[Chart 3: Actual forms of ideophones I-1 to I-6 in the ET1 corpus

3.4. Coming back to the characterization by Asher[1985] for ideophones in modern Tamil as "uninflected" forms, we are now in a position to observe that the situation of Classical Tamil is very different, because the items examined are indeed inflected, the inflection being based on the paradigm of the quotative verb (=QV), which acts as an operator. The elements of its paradigm which we see here are:

- Finite forms: eṇṇānai "you-SING_say", eṇṇāṇṇu "it-says", eṇṇāna "they-NEUTER_say", eṇṇā "they-NEUTER_say", eṇṇicīṇ (33)
- Converbs (2 types): eṇā "say-CONV1", eṇṇu "say-CONV2".
- The root form (used adjectivally): eṇ.

A second remark is that these inflected ideophones usually seem to have a preferred syntactic role, and that one of their forms will be more frequent. For instance the preferred forms for I-2 and I-5 are puḷḷeṇ and naḷḷeṇ and they seem to be used in a clear majority of cases in adjectival role, whereas I-3, I-4 and I-6 are most often used in adverbial roles: their preferred forms are taṇṇeṇa, paiyeṇa and oyyeṇa. A less clear-cut case is that of I-1 (= kalleṇal), the most frequently used ideophone, which we shall illustrate by literary quotations in the next subsection.

3.5. A case study: the I-1 ideophone, alias kalleṇal

According to the MTL, the value of kalleṇal, alias I-1, alias MTL062, is to signify "excitement". To see concretely how this is realized, we now examine various examples taken from the literature.

The Chart 4 that follows gives the details concerning the distribution of kalleṇal inside the ET1 corpus. It has to be understood that the 4 different forms belonging to the paradigm of kalleṇal are met with in different syntactic roles, as indicated in the right column of Chart 3.

	AK	NA	KU	PU	AI	PA	Total	Syntactic role
kalleṇ	5	4	2	7	2	-	(20)	adjectival (Ad-nominal)
kalleṇa	12	6	1	5	1	1	(26)	Ad-verbal
kalleṇṇā	-	-	1	1	-	-	(2)	Predicate (plur.)
kalleṇṇāṇṇu	-	1	-	-	-	-	(1)	Predicate (sing.)
Total (colonne)	17	11	4	13	3	(1)	49

Chart 4: kalleṇal (distribution & syntactic roles)

The first item, kalleṇ, is an ad-nominal (or adjectival) form (34) that we find in examples like: (35)

(5) kalleṇ ciṇṇukuṭi
 say-KAL_ZERO small-hamlet
 [AK, 110-13] "little hamlet of great bustle" (VMS[1975])

(6) kalleṇ kāṇattu

say-KAL_ZERO forest_Obl.

[KU, 179-1] "[...] noisy forest" (Hart[1975])

Coming to the predicative forms, kalleṇṇa (plural) and kalleṇṇanṇu (singular), I will cite one Kuṇṭokai example, reduced of course to the bare bones, along with two of its published translations:

(7) koṭiyōr nā [...] kalleṇṇa [KU, 24-6]

cruel_Pl.Hum. tongue say-KAL_Pl.Neut.

"These cruel women's tongues are working on me" (A.K.

Ramanujan[1967])

"The tongues of these evil people are pounding me" (Shanmugam Pillai & David Ludden [1976])

I will not give here an example for the neutral singular predicative form kalleṇṇāṇṇu, but to conclude this exploration of syntactic positions, I will give two examples for kalleṇa, the converb (36) or ad-verbal participle: the first one illustrates its adverbial role, and the second illustrates its absolute role.

(8) [...] kalleṇa olittu [...] (PU, 320-9)

say-KAL_CONV1. resound_CONV2

"cackling loudly" (Hart[1999])

(9) [...] peruṅ kaḷip pākkam kalleṇa, varum [...] koṅkaṇ tēr [...]

big backwater maritime-village say-KAL_CONV1 come_NON-PAST.3rd maritime-chief chariot

"The chariot of the maritime chief will come, making vociferous the wide marshy tract." (N.Kandaswamy Pillai[1970])

We should add to these observations that, as noted in 3.4., not every ideophone can be seen in the corpus under examination to have all the syntactic roles. Many ideophones have a preferred syntactic role. If we take for instance ñerēreṇal, which is item I-16, we see that it can occur only in an adverbial role, like in the following passage, excerpted from the description of a marriage ceremony:

(10) kalleṇ cummayār ñerēreṇa pukutantu (AK)

say-KAL_ZERO noisy-ones say-ÑERĒR_CONV1 enter_CONV2

"[the relations hand her over], entering in haste [into the marriage house] with tumultuous noise" (VMS[1975])

4. CONCLUSIONS: EVOLUTION OF THE SET OF IDEOPHONES

4.1. We now hold in our hands both ends of the story of ideophones, one being the modern period with example (2) and the use of diṭīr-ṇṇu (See 1.2.), the other one being the most ancient period reachable by us, the so-called Sangam period, with examples (5) to (10) illustrating the use of kalleṇal and ñerēreṇal. There would remain for us the task to examine what is to be observed between these two ends. Is there any continuity? As I have already remarked once, the focus must not necessarily lie on the individual items, but it could also be brought on the groups and subgroups of items, on the suffixes, on the expressive devices (like for instance the reduplication), that is to say on the dynamics that is seen in them.

If we examine for instance the data presented in Chart 2, in the light of the elements that were seen in Chart 1, it can be seen that among the 23 ideophones present in Sangam Tamil, and if we concern ourselves only with those mentioned in MTL:

- All belong to the S group
- 14 belong to subgroup {1a}: kalleṇal, pulleṇal, taṇṇeṇal, etc.
- 3, with -um suffix, belong to subgroup {1b}: iḷumeṇal, etc.
- 1 belongs to subgroup {1c}: ñerēreṇal.

4.2. The testimony of an ancient lexicon

It is, in this connection, interesting to have a look at the testimony that is provided by two traditionnal (non-alphabetical) lexicons, the Tivākaram, probably dating back to the VIIIth century (37), and the Cūṭāmaṇi Nikaṇṭu, dating back to ca. 1520 AD. The interesting fact is that one of the verses in Tivākaram contains a short list of 8 ideophones. This is an interesting evidence that the linguistic class which I have been trying to describe, whatever be the name used to designate it, was having a psychological reality or an intuitive relevance for (ancient) speakers of Ancient Tamil, or at least for such ancient knowledgeable speakers as those who made and used these lexicons. (38)

The 8 items enumerated by verse 1900 (39) of Tivākaram are the following:

- 1. immeṇal (I-7, MTL014)
- 2. kalleṇal (I-1, MTL062)
- 3. iḷumeṇal (I-8, MTL017)

- 4. valleṇal (I-15, MTL536)
- 5. pommeṇal (MTL465)
- 6. olleṇal (I-9, MTL031)
- 7. poḷḷeṇal (MTL473)
- 8. ṇeḷḷeṇal (MTL255)

We see that five of them (I-1, I-7, I-8, I-9 & I-15) appear indeed inside the most ancient part of Tamil literature. Of the remaining three, poḷḷeṇal is already attested in Kuraḷ 487. It can as well be found in Cīvakacintāmaṇi, where we also see pommeṇal (equally attested in Tirukkōvaiyār). But a search for the last item, ṇeḷḷeṇal, has remained unfruitful, \(40\) and the only authority that MTL is able to quote for it, is Tivākaram itself, which explains the briefness of its explanation: "an imitative sound".

4.3. The wider indian context The explanation found inside MTL concerning ṇeḷḷeṇal is not based on the western reflection on the onomatopoeia and the "expressive" symbolism which Apte presented mentioning Sapir (see 1.3.). As far as MTL is concerned, he is simply translating the verse from Tivākaram, that reads thus (in the reference edition):

immeṇal, kalleṇal, iḷumeṇal, valleṇal, pommeṇal, olleṇal, poḷḷeṇal, ṇeḷḷeṇal, aṇṇa aṇukaraṇa ocai ākum

This verse says that the 8 words are (instances of) anukaraṇa ocai. It is of course not possible in the present circumstance to explore here all the ramifications of that fact, and I will content myself with simply remarking that anukaraṇa, which seems to be the source for the "imitative word" of MTL, is a sanskrit term found in Pāṇini's grammar in three sūtra-s \(41\), and that these sūtra-s seem to deal with what might be ideophones in sanskrit. \(42\)

4.4. How the story continues.

We now come back to Tivākaram. As seen in the 1990-1993 critical edition, the list of eight items mentioned in 4.2. is what is seen in manuscripts. However, the first edition of Tivākaram, published in 1839, by Tāṇṭavarāya Mutaliyār, added as a followup to the list of eight items two more lists:

- one of those mentioned 6 items: kommeṇal, viṭēleṇal, terēleṇal, (43) mukēreṇal, ammeṇal, carēleṇal.
- the second, added 10 more items, all from the R(eduplicative) group (see 2.4): paṭapaṭeṇal, kaḷakaḷeṇal, paṭapateṇal, koḷakoḷeṇal, moṭumoṭeṇal, tiṭutiṭeṇal, mokamokeṇal, kalakaleṇal, neṭaneṭeṇal, neṭaneṭeṇal, kaṭakaṭeṇal. The technical term designating those last is upaya-v-ōcai, where we again see one sanskrit component upaya "double".

The explanation for this is that Tāṇṭavarāya Mutaliyār has "improved" the Tivākaram text by making use of a more recent lexicon. The triple list is in fact found inside the Cūṭāmaṇi Nikaṇṭu (voir édition Appācāmi Mutaliyār, kurōti varuṣam). But by doing this, he has of course created some temporal inconsistencies, because VIIIth century vocabulary is not the same as that which is found in the XVIth century.

If we re-attribute the second and the third list just mentioned to the correct periods, we see that they show

- that the real development of the {1c} group, which was attested only by the I-16 item (ñerēreṇal) in the ancient period took probably place after the Tivākaram
- that the massive development of the R group, which is not attested at all in the ancient period, (44) took also place during the same period.

It will be my task, in some forthcoming studies, to try to throw more light on the precise evolution of this small corner of the Tamil vocabulary.

NOTES

(1) I wish to express here my heartfelt thanks to Stéphane Agnès ROBERT for a fruitful suggestion, that embarked me on the exploration of a typological path, starting from my peaceful retreat among the traditional Tamil medieval commentators. I also wish to thank here Eva WILDEN, Nalini BALBIR, Thomas LEHMAN, François GROS, Jan HOUBEN, Nagamanickam GANESAN, K. KALYANASUNDARAM, K.S. NAGARAJA, Peri BHASKARARAO, Indira Visvanathan PETERSON, Pascale HAAG-BERNEDE, François GRIMAL and many others, for their timely aid, at various periods and in very diverse ways (impossible for me to summarize here), while I was exploring indian texts and languages.

(2) This paper is a preliminary report on an ongoing research that takes place within the framework of a research federation "Typologie et Universaux Linguistiques" (TUL, FR2559) recently created by the French National Center for Scientific Research (CNRS). A second and more comprehensive paper is scheduled to appear later, based on a detailed exploration of the Tamil literary corpus, taking into account the analysis offered by the native Tamil Grammarians and commentators, as well as the wider Indian context.

(3) When necessary, I shall refer to items in Malten[1989] by means of a capital M followed by a serial number (between 1 & 229), corresponding to their order of appearance inside the belegsammlung that stands on pp. 131-226. As far as I can see, the following 18 correspondences seem to hold good between Asher and Malten's catalogue:

- A1 --> M12,

KOLAM, 2004, January vols. 9 & 10, Proceedings of the Panel 36 at the 17th European Conference on Modern South Asian Studies Heidelberg, September 9th - 14th, 2002 ; Tamil Studies: Current Trends and Perspectives, edited by Sascha Ebeling, Thomas Lehmann and Ulrike Niklas, second session : Tamil Linguistics and Epigraphy

- A2 --> M23,
- A3 --> M48,
- A5 --> M6,
- A10 --> M58,
- A11 --> M77,
- A12 --> M65,
- A16 --> M90,
- A18 --> M115,
- A19 --> M137,
- A20 --> M138,
- A22 --> M143,
- A23 --> M149,
- A24 --> M166,
- A25 --> M181,
- A26 --> M209,
- A28 --> M223,
- A29 --> M28.

However, I was not able to identify in Maltem[1989] items corresponding to A6 (sudden action) and A27 (howling of dog).

(4) In the case of the (verbal) root kalakala, the linguistic items are {kalakalaveṇṇu, kalakalakkum, kalakala, kalakalappu, kalakaleṇa, etc.}.

(5) The reader interested in the consequences of the fact that the Tamil writing system does not allow a representation of the distinction between voiced and unvoiced initial occlusives can read Emeneau/K.Hart[1993] and Steever[1990].

(6) And here again, Malten is interested in the (verbal) root, which stands in fact for a collection of various items: {kaṇakaṇappa, kaṇakaṇeṇa, kaṇakaṇattu, kaṇakaṇattatu, etc.}. Malten offers, among other examples (on p.134), avaṇ uṭampu kaṇakaṇa eṇṇu cuṭukiṇṇatu "Er hat leichtes Fieber", jurattil uṭampu kaṇakaṇattatu (same transl.).

(7) See (A) in 1.2.

(8) It will be clear to all who are familiar with the diglossic situation of Tamil, that tiṭṭireṇṇu is the item which corresponds in the formal variety of Tamil to the diṭṭiir-ṇṇu (=A17) mentioned by Asher in his description of spoken Tamil. For those not familiar with diglossia, a good reference is Britto[1986].

(9) It is also the case that Cre-A dictionary has a separate entry for tiṭṭir, categorized as a peyar aṭai (adjectival), as seen in tiṭṭir maṇamāṇṇam "sudden change of mood" or tiṭṭir iṭṭli

"instant idli". But this is not the case for all the 29 items listed by Asher.

(10) I shall not attempt here to establish a usage distinction between these two forms. The 2 examples given by MTL, under 2 different meanings, are: tiṭīreṇa vantāṇ "unexpectedly he-came" and tiṭīreṇru viḷuntatu "tiṭīreṇru it-fell", where tiṭīr-eṇru is said by MTL to be an onom. qualifying the act of falling, in terms of oli (sound).

(11) In the final version of this study, an attempt may be made, on the line of Steever[1983] (chapter 1) commenting on Benvéniste and on Bloch, to ascertain more precisely the characteristics of the quotative verb eṇal in its "auxiliant" role inside the X-eṇal expressions that are studied here.

(12) However, I shall concentrate in this article on a set of forms which is homogeneous in an inflectional sense, and shall not try to see things from the point of view of the root as Malten does.

(13) This is evidently an impossible task, but this is not the right place for elaborating further on this point. For a more precise description of MTL, see for instance Gregory JAMES[2000], pp.222-228.

(14) That subset was obtained by searching the electronic version of MTL which contains more than 117500 entries. I here wish to express my warm thanks to my German colleagues in Köln who, by creating the OTL ("On-line Tamil Lexicon"), available at this link: OTL have made the quasi-enumeration of Tamil ideophones possible.

(15) They are listed as GROUP 7 in APPENDIX A.

(16) The list is given as GROUP 6 inside APPENDIX A. It probably requires more examination but the items in it appeared doubtful as ideophones, and have been set aside for that reason.

(17) See for instance Abbi [1992], Emeneau & K.Hart [1993], Abbi [1994], Nagaraja [1994], Diffloth [2001]. Others have also been satisfied with "onomatopoeia" and "onomatopoetics" (See Apte[1968], Emeneau[1969], Peri Bhaskararao[1977]) See also Voeltz & Kilian-Hatz [2001, p. 3] for arguments on the necessity for linguists to adopt a common terminology, while studying similar phenomenon in different languages, if typological studies are to make progress.

(18) For each place in the chart, an indication is given of the number of items concerned and of the group reference number. All the items themselves are to be found inside Appendix A, at the end of this article, along with the English glosses given for them by the MTL.

(19) It seems this is even more true in the case of words that have an onomatopoeic character. There is a case here for the French proverb: "Qui se ressemble s'assemble" (Birds of one feather flock together).

(20) See for instance Malten[1989], Steever[1990] and Abbi[1992].

(21) See for instance Emeneau[1967], Apte[1968], Peri Bhaskararao[1977], Emeneau[1980], Emeneau[1994].

(22) I translated this (into French) in Chevillard[1996, p.514] as: "Mentionner comme `venant' ceux qui normalement ne viennent pas, (1)// Mentionner comme `disant' ceux qui normalement ne disent [mot] (2)// Toutes les [expressions] telles (3a)// Sont paroles suggestives, qui disent [en fait] `[ces choses] sont telles' (4)// Au moyen des comportements [qui sont prêtés] à chacune (3b).

(23) His examples are: aval aval eṅkiṅṛaṇa nel and maḷai maḷai eṅkiṅṛaṇa paim kuḷ. See Chevillard[1996, p. 514]

(24) Fortunately, some very useful data bases are to-day available online, thanks to pioneering collective endeavours such as the "Project Madurai", which maintains a web site, under the guidance of Dr K. Kalyanasundaram.

(25) For explanations on the linguistic characteristics, see for instance Akattiyaliṅkam[1983-1986].

(26) It should be said once for all that the figures given here are subject to variation, dependent as they are on the variants which are chosen by the editors of these texts. There is often a high degree of incertitude as to what the original text may have been.

(27) It should also be noted that 2 quotation forms have been mentioned here by me that do not appear as such inside the MTL: I-6 and I-14. They seemed to me to belong to the same group as the others, but they are in fact mentioned inside MTL by the quotation form that appears in the leftmost column.

KOLAM, 2004, January vols. 9 & 10, Proceedings of the Panel 36 at the 17th European Conference on Modern South Asian Studies Heidelberg, September 9th - 14th, 2002 ; Tamil Studies: Current Trends and Perspectives, edited by Sascha Ebeling, Thomas Lehmann and Ulrike Niklas, second session : Tamil Linguistics and Epigraphy

(28) This consists of KU, AK, NA, PU, AI, PA, Kalittokai and Paripāṭal.

(29) This consists of 10 long poems.

(30) This is the reason why they were not used for preparing Chart 1.

(31) This will be done in a more comprehensive forthcoming paper.

(32) This examination is limited to the 6 most frequent ideophones.

(33) The problem of the icin suffix is complex. I will simply say here that in U.V.S. 6th edition, p.37, the form taṇṇenricin (Ainḱurunūru, 73-4) is glossed by taṇṇenratu, a 3rd person neuter form.

(34) More precisely, it is an occurrence of the nude verbal root used adjectivally, in a type of construction which is called viṇait tokai "verbal compound" by the Tamil grammatical tradition. The word-by-word analysis signals these forms as using the ZERO morph.

(35) To put these in perspective, if we want to stick to the literality of kalleṇal, we could perhaps say that in this variety of Tamil, the idiomatic way of translating "noisy forest" is to express it literally as "forest that says KAL".

(36) Tamil possesses several forms of converb, which I will distinguish here by numbers, for the sake of brevity: CONV1 (ceya-v-eṇṇum-vāypāṭu), CONV2 (ceyt-eṇṇum-vāypāṭu).

(37) The Tivākaram lists 9000 words in roughly 2500 verses. See Gregory James[2000], p. 62-67.

(38) A forthcoming study will also present the relevance of the class in the context of grammatical texts.

(39) The reference number is given on the basis of the critical edition prepared by Mu. Caṇmukam Piḷḷai et I. Cuntaramūrtti (two volumes, 1990-1993).

(40) There is a possibility that ñeḷḷeṇal, if it ever existed, was related to ñeḷḷal, seen in kaṭun tēr kuḷitta ñeḷḷal āṅkaṇ, phrase that appears almost identically in AK326-4 ("the rapid moving chariots (of wealthy people) in the streets where ruts were formed", VMS[1975]) and PU15-1 ("On the streets torn up by your swift chariots", Hart[1999]). Another hypothesis is that there has been a scribal error and that the original last item was not ñeḷḷeṇal but our old friend ñerēreṇal. But all this is of course pure speculation.

(41) The precise reference numbers of these sūtra-s in Pāṇini's grammar are, according to the numbering in Renou[1966], I.4.62, V.4.57 & VI.1.98. Renou translates anukaraṇam in I.4.62 by "un mot imitant (un bruit naturel)"; he translates avyaktānukaraṇa by "un mot imitant un son inarticulé (=onomatopée)" in V.4.57 and by "(mot) imitant un son indistinct (=onomatopéique)" in VI.1.97.

(42) One example mentioned by Renou for 1.4.62 is khaṭad iti. Such expressions, built with the help of the particle iti are examined by Hahn[1977]. Another possibility, if one does not want to use iti, is to use the secondary suffix ḌāC (see Pāṇini 5.4.57).

(43) This item seems to have escaped the scrutiny of the compilers of MTL.

(44) There are some reduplicated items in the texts, like for instance kiṇkiṇi (an ornament) which is seen in Kuṟun.148. But there are no ideophones with reduplication.

APPENDIX_A: 646 entries extracted from the Madras Tamil Lexicon (by groups)

Note: each of the 646 items bears two tags: the first tag refers to the subgroup and is for indexation purpose the second tag is more content-oriented. For instance, in the third position, "C" tags color terms, "Z" tags items connected to animals, "X" tags items that were originally kept in group 6, but were later moved to other groups due to morphological similarities.

GROUP 1: 235 items [S= "no reduplication"]

Subgroup 1a: 120 items (no suffix)

1. {1a}{ShC} (MTL033) [kakreṇal] an expression signifying blackness
