Resum

Han estat identificats un total de sis documents inèdits en el registre de la notaria de Peire Elzeard, entre 1308-1309, ara als Archives Départementales des Bouches-du-Rhône, 381 E 19. Aquests ens ofereixen els detalls d'unes propietats censades a prop de Marsella, comprades en aquells anys per Arnau de Vilanova. Editem aquests documents aquí, precedits per una breu introducció que contextualitza les seves inversions a la llum del que sabem d'aquestes activitats en aquest període, i intencionalment, en la mesura possible, localitzar aquestes propietats.

Paraules clau: Arnau de Vilanova, propietats de Marsella, transcripció, document notarial, Peire Elzeard.

Abstract

A set of six previously unpublished documents has been identified in a register from 1308-1309 of the Marseilles notary Peire Elzeard, now in the Archives Départementales des Bouches-du-Rhône, 381 E 19. They set out the details of certain properties registered in the region around Marseilles and purchased in those years by Arnau de Vilanova. An edition of the documents is presented here, preceded by a brief introduction that contextualizes his investments in the light of what we know of his activities in that period, and attempts as far as possible to localize the properties involved.

Keywords: Arnau de Vilanova, properties of Marseilles, transcription, notary document, Peire Elzeard.

In the years 1306-1308 Arnau de Vilanova was evidently enjoying a moment of calm after several years of theological controversy. We have almost no documentary evidence concerning his activities in that period, but what there is places him on the axis between Montpellier (where he had a wife and home) and Marseille (where his nephew Joan Blasi lived), two cities 170 km. apart. He gave testimony before a notary in 1306, almost certainly in Montpellier, concerning the traditions of the university there.¹ In February and March 1308 he was in Marseille, drawing up a codicil to his will and writing to king Jaume II of Arago-Catalunya.² We can infer that he spent most of these years composing his great Speculum medicine, which Jaume II was expecting to receive in September 1308, and Montpellier would have given him the resources necessary to write it; by 1310, indeed, it was already in circulation in that city.³

Now some additional documentation has surfaced that tends to situate him still more solidly on that axis in those years.⁴ A badly deteriorated register of the Marseille notary Peire Elzeard, covering the period June 1308-September 1309, contains documentation of Arnau's purchases through several procurators of a series of properties and their associated ground-rents (cens) in the Marseille area; it is found scattered through fols. 31r-33v, 34v, 37r, 43v-44r, 45v-46r, and 49v-50r. Almost all of the documents in the register are undated as to year, and many as to day and month, including all the documentation that interests us, but the documents in the register that are dated are arranged sequentially. On fol. 26v, a document bears the date kls. December (= 1 Dec.) 1308, and on fol. 28 a document is dated 19 kls. January (= 14 Dec.); the next date that appears is 16 kls. April (= 17 Mar.), on fol. 40v. A document on fol. 49r is dated 11 kls. June (= 22 May), and another on 50v is dated 2 non. June (= 4 Jun.). Given these bracketing dates, therefore, it seems probable that the first part of the Arnaldian material was entered in the register between December 1308 and March 1309, and another portion between March and June 1309.⁵

Arnau himself does not figure personally in these acts, but instead carried out the transactions through a number of Marseille procurators. He may still have been at home in Montpellier when the first of the documents were drawn up, but he may equally well have already started out on a mission to Frederic III of Sicily, whose crusading hopes he can be found subsequently reporting to Cardinal Jacobus Colonna when in Rome in May 1309.⁶ Even so, the documents deepen our understanding of his affairs as they had evolved by the end of 1308. We know that in the 1280s and 1290s Arnau had regularly made similar purchases around Valencia, making it the center of his economic life. Now it seems possible that he had decided to entrench himself economically in Languedoc-Provence instead, perhaps preparing to live out his life there. If that was his original thought, his increasing involvement in public life from 1309 on and the renewed controversies that ensued put an end to it.

Interestingly, the four properties in question were not clustered close together but were distributed in a broad ring around the city: from the val de Souzède (in the quartier Saint-Marcel, east of the port) to the val de Michel (quartier Saint-Juste) and Barnassot (Sainte-Marthe), well to the north-east; to the verger de Rostens (Argalades), to the north.⁷ Arnau's agents in Mar-

5. The first of these documents that we have dated to March-June 1309 has appended to it a further document which is dated «anno quo supra VI kalendas septembris [= 27 August]», but this has clearly been squeezed into the bottom margin of the leaf after the original entry was made.
6. This sequence of events is established by the Cardinal's letter to Jaume II speaking of Arnau's arrival in Rome, written on 13 May in the 7th indiction (= 1309), and published by Heinrich FINKE, Aus den Tagen Bonifaz VIII, Münster 1902, pp. 225-226, n. 6. But there is unfortunately no evidence at all as to when Arnau might have left southern France to set out for Frederic's court.

seille, the merchants Arnaut sa Fabrega and Nicolau Bonaventura, must have been well informed about economic opportunities in territorio Massilie. It is probably no coincidence that the first-named of these, Arnaut sa Fabrega, was also the agent of Arnau's nephew, Joan Blasi, who was resident in Marseille, but whether Joan had recommended Arnau to his uncle's attention or vice versa is for the moment an open question.⁸
