

HAL
open science

Najrān

Jérémie Schiettecatte

► To cite this version:

Jérémie Schiettecatte. Najrān. Roger S. Bagnall; Kai Brodersen; Craig B. Champion; Andrew Erskine; Sabine R. Huebner. The Encyclopedia of Ancient History, Wiley & Sons, 2017, 9781444338386. 10.1002/9781444338386.wbeah30159 . halshs-01585087

HAL Id: halshs-01585087

<https://shs.hal.science/halshs-01585087>

Submitted on 13 Sep 2017

HAL is a multi-disciplinary open access archive for the deposit and dissemination of scientific research documents, whether they are published or not. The documents may come from teaching and research institutions in France or abroad, or from public or private research centers.

L'archive ouverte pluridisciplinaire HAL, est destinée au dépôt et à la diffusion de documents scientifiques de niveau recherche, publiés ou non, émanant des établissements d'enseignement et de recherche français ou étrangers, des laboratoires publics ou privés.

Najrān

JÉRÉMIE SCHIETTECATTE

Najrān (Sab. Nagrān ; Gr. Νεγράνων /Ναγαρα ; Lat. Negrana /Nagara): 40-km-long oasis located along the wādī Najrān in southwest Saudi Arabia. Najrān is also the name of the main city, and that of the tribe which was settled there in the early Christian era. The luxuriance of the oasis and its unique location on the caravan roads fostered the regional development from the first millennium BCE onward. The richness of the oasis is echoed in a third century Sabaic inscription (Ja 577) which mentions sixty-eight settlements, sixty thousand fields, and ninety-seven wells. Ammianus Marcellinus counted Najrān as one of the seven chief cities in Arabia Felix (Amm. Marc. Res Gestae, 23.6.47).

When leaving Arabia Felix, Najrān was the last fertile valley before entering the barren areas of Arabia Deserta, at the crossroads for caravaneers heading toward the Mediterranean Sea, along the Hijaz range, or toward the Persian Gulf, through the Wādī Dawāsir.

From the eighth to the sixth century BCE, the valley of Najrān was the heart of the kingdom of Muha'mir, with its capital city at Ragmat (Hebr. Ra'mah – Gen 10:7,7; Ezek 27:22). At around the fifth century BCE, the kingdom of Amīr succeeded that of Muha'mir; Ragmat was abandoned for the benefit of a new capital city, and Zirbān, later called Najrān, was occupied until the very early Islamic era. This town is identified with the modern ruins of al-Ukhdūd, on the right bank of the wādī Najrān. Archaeological excavations revealed a planned city, being a regular square bisected by a main street into two equal parts (Figure 1). Surrounded by an extra muros settlement, the town extended over 50 ha. The main deity dhu-Samāwī was worshiped in the temple Ka'batan.

Owing to the strategic location of Najrān, neighboring kingdoms took a keen interest in its control. Coveted by the kingdom of Saba', the city of Ragmat was burned down during a military expedition. Thereafter, Najrān joined the trade coalition headed by the south Arabian kingdom of Ma'in (fourth to second centuries BCE); in 25 BCE, the town was seized by Aelius Gallus' expedition (Strab. Geogr. 16.4.24; Plin. HN 6.32.160); a few decades later, Saba' took control of the oasis, a rule which was disputed by Aksum for a short period (ca. 210– 240 CE). In 328 CE, in his epitaph found at al-Namara in Syria (Louvre 205), Mara' al-Qays, son of 'Amraw king of all 'Arab, said he fought with the tribe of Madhhij “ until he struck with his spear the gates of Najrān, the city of Shammar [Yuhar'ish, the king of Himyar].” The fate of the inhabitants of Najrān was then intrinsically tied to Himyarite policy. When the Himyarite kings chose Judaism (ca. 380 CE) and rejected pagan cults, it is likely that the inhabitants of the oasis – under their control – did likewise. At around 450 CE, groups of Najrānites converted to Christianity through contact with the Monophysite milieu of Syria and Nestorians from al-Hīra in Iraq (Robin 2008). The proselytism of the Monophysite community and their connections to Byzantium led to the first wave of persecutions by the Himyarite king Shurihbi'l Yakkuf: the beheading of Azqīr, priest of Najrān, reported ca. 475 in the Martyrdom of Azqir (Conti Rossini 1910); the stoning of Paul, bishop of Najrān, ca. 500, mentioned in the Letter of Simeon of Beth-Arsham (Shahid 1971). The second wave of persecutions was conducted by the Jewish Himyarite king Yūsuf As'ar in 523 CE : the Book of the Himyarites describes a five-month siege followed by the slaughter of many Christians (Moberg 1924). The massacre was fraught with consequences: an expedition carried out by the Aksumite king Kaleb led to the elimination of Yūsuf and the subjugation of HIMYAR to the Aksumite princes for half a century.

Under the authority of the descendants of the leader of the Christian community, al- Hārith bin Ka'b (Gr. Arethas), executed during the persecution, the tribal group of the inhabitants of Najrān took the name of its ruling dynasty: the banū al-Hārith bin Ka'b. Najrān became again an active trade centre, halfway between Mecca and Yemen, headed by a triumvirate described in the delegation of the Christians of Najrān coming to Muhammad at Medina ca. 631– 2 (Ibn Hishām, Al-Sīra al-nabawiyya : 573), which included a governor, a tribal chief, and a bishop.

During the caliphate of 'Umar, the Monophysites were expelled, and they settled at Najrāniyya, near al-Kufa (Iraq) (Robin 2008). By the eleventh century, the ancient city of Najrān, today al-Ukhdūd, had fallen into ruins. The main settlement shifted to the left bank of the wādī, where the modern city of Najrān is located. Jewish and Christian communities were settled there at least until the early thirteenth century (Ibn al-Mujāwir, Ta'rikh al-Mustabsir : 209).

REFERENCES AND SUGGESTED READINGS

- BEAUCAMP, J., BRIQUEL-CHATONNET, F., and ROBIN, C. J., eds. (2010) Juifs et chrétiens en Arabie aux Ve et VIe siècles. Regards croisés sur les sources. Paris.
- CONTI ROSSINI, C., ed. (1910) “Un documento sul cristianesimo nello Iemen ai tempi del re Sharā-bīl Yakkuf.” Rendiconti della Reale Accademia dei Lincei, Classe di scienze morali, storiche e filologiche 19: 705–50.
- MOBERG, A., ed. (1924) The book of the Himyarites: fragments of a hitherto unknown Syriac work. Lund.
- ROBIN, C. J. (2008) “Joseph, dernier roi de Himyar.” Jerusalem Studies in Arabic and Islam 34: 1–124.
- SCHIETTECATTE, J. (2011) D’Aden à Zafar: villes d’Arabie du sud préislamique. Paris.
- SHAHID, I. ed. (1971) The martyrs of Najran. New documents. Brussels.
- ZARINS, J., KABAWI, A., MURAD, A. and RASHAD, S. (1983) “Preliminary report on the Najrān/Ukhdūd survey and excavations.” Atlat 7: 22–40.

FIGURE 1 Plan of the intra muros area at al-Ukhdūd (Schiettecatte, J. 2011: figure 143). Reproduced with permission from Schiettecatte, J. 2011. Figure originally based on material from Zarins et al., 1983.

CITATION

The Encyclopedia of Ancient History. Edited by Roger S. Bagnall, Kai Brodersen, Craige B. Champion, Andrew Erskine, and Sabine R. Huebner. 2017. John Wiley & Sons.
DOI: 10.1002/9781444338386.wbeah30159