

HAL
open science

Images of Black people in Roman age through Sculpture: identity and otherness

Estefanía Alba Benito Lázaro, Sergio España-Chamorro

► To cite this version:

Estefanía Alba Benito Lázaro, Sergio España-Chamorro. Images of Black people in Roman age through Sculpture: identity and otherness. Paola Ruggeri. L’Africa Romana, Momenti di continuità e rottura: bilancio di trent’anni di convegni L’Africa romana, pp.2177-2186, 2015. halshs-03548185

HAL Id: halshs-03548185

<https://shs.hal.science/halshs-03548185>

Submitted on 9 Feb 2022

HAL is a multi-disciplinary open access archive for the deposit and dissemination of scientific research documents, whether they are published or not. The documents may come from teaching and research institutions in France or abroad, or from public or private research centers.

L’archive ouverte pluridisciplinaire HAL, est destinée au dépôt et à la diffusion de documents scientifiques de niveau recherche, publiés ou non, émanant des établissements d’enseignement et de recherche français ou étrangers, des laboratoires publics ou privés.

L'AFRICA ROMANA

Momenti di continuità e rottura:
bilancio di trent'anni di convegni L'Africa romana

a cura di
Paola Ruggeri

Estratti

Carocci  editore

Collana del Dipartimento di Storia, Scienze dell'Uomo e della Formazione
dell'Università degli Studi di Sassari

Serie del Centro di Studi Interdisciplinari sulle Province Romane dell'Università degli Studi di Sassari

Direttore: Paola Ruggeri

49

*In memoria delle vittime innocenti del tragico attentato
al Musée National du Bardo, con la solidarietà di tutti gli studiosi
al popolo della Tunisia libera e democratica*

Sassari, 18 marzo 2015

In copertina: L'arco di Caracalla a Volubilis (foto di Piero Bartoloni)

1<sup>a</sup> edizione, dicembre 2015
© copyright 2015 by Carocci editore s.p.a., Roma

Finito di stampare nel dicembre 2015 da EuroLit, Roma

ISSN 1828-3004
ISBN 978-88-430-7400-6

Riproduzione vietata ai sensi di legge
(art. 171 della legge 22 aprile 1941, n. 633)
Senza regolare autorizzazione, è vietato riprodurre questo volume anche parzialmente e con qualsiasi mezzo, compresa la fotocopia, anche per uso interno o didattico.

I lettori che desiderano informazioni sui volumi pubblicati dalla casa editrice possono rivolgersi direttamente a:

Carocci editore
Corso Vittorio Emanuele II, 229 - 00186 Roma
telefono 06 42 81 84 17 - fax 06 42 74 79 31

Siamo su:
www.carocci.it
www.facebook.com/carocceditore
www.twitter.com/carocceditore

L'Africa romana

Momenti di continuità e rottura:
bilancio di trent'anni di convegni L'Africa romana

Atti del xx Convegno Internazionale di studi
Alghero - Porto Conte Ricerche, 26-29 settembre 2013

A cura di Paola Ruggeri con la collaborazione di Maria Bastiana Cocco, Alberto Gavini, Edgardo Badaracco, Pierpaolo Longu

Estratti

Volume pubblicato con il contributo finanziario di

Fondazione Banco di Sardegna

Università degli Studi di Sassari Dipartimento di Storia, Scienze dell' Uomo e della Formazione

e con il patrocinio e il sostegno del

Ministero degli Affari Esteri e della Cooperazione Internazionale

I saggi di questi Atti di convegno sono stati sottoposti a referaggio.

Comitato scientifico

Presidente: Attilio Mastino

Componenti: Aomar Akerraz, Angela Antona, Samir Aounallah, Piero Bartoloni, Nacéra Benseddik, Paolo Bernardini, Azedine Beschouch, Antonietta Boninu, Giovanni Brizzi, Francesca Cenerini, Maria Bastiana Cocco, Antonio Maria Corda, Anna Depalmas, Lietta De Salvo, Angela Donati, Rubens D'Oriano, Layla Es-Sadra, Mounir Fantar, Piergiorgio Floris, Emilio Galvagno, Elisabetta Garau, Alberto Gavini, Mansour Ghaki, Julián González, Michele Guirguis, John J. Herrmann Jr, Antonio Ibba, Ridha Kaabia, Mustapha Khanoussi, Giovanni Marginesu, Marc Mayer, Maria Grazia Melis, Marco Milanese, Marco Edoardo Minoja, Alberto Moravetti, Giampiero Pianu, Marco Rendeli, Daniela Rovina, Paola Ruggeri, Donatella Salvi, Sandro Schipani, Ahmed Siraj, Pier Giorgio Spanu, Alessandro Teatini, Alessandro Usai, Emerenziana Usai, Cinzia Vismara, Raimondo Zucca

Membri onorari: José María Blázquez, M'hamed Hassine Fantar, Jean-Paul Morel, René Rebuffat, Joyce Reynolds

Coordinamento scientifico

Centro di Studi Interdisciplinari sulle Province Romane
dell'Università degli Studi di Sassari

Viale Umberto I, 52 - 07100 Sassari
telefono 079 20 65 203 - fax 079 20 65 241
email: africaromana@uniss.it

ESTEFANÍA ALBA BENITO LÁZARO, SERGIO ESPAÑA-CHAMORRO

Images of Black People in Roman Age through Sculpture: Identity and Otherness

The study of the representation of black people is an interesting topic to know more about the non-classical image of the Roman society. They were a minority and mostly a marginal part of the society, as it can be interpreted from the statues of slaves which we know. But we should not understand the meaning of the figures of black people in the Roman mind with the prejudices of racism and ethnic animosity created mainly in the Medieval Europe and perpetuated since then.

Key words: Blacks, otherness, iconography, Aethiops, African people.

Geographical and terminological contextualization

The most common term to refer to a black person in Antiquity was Aethiops, but it was not the only one. The Greek word aithiops means literally “sunburnt face”. But the Greek conception of Ethiopia and its people was not so clear. Its geographical contextualization was a little more accurate in the age of Herodotus. He described two types of Aethiopes, those who inhabited the territories of the south of Egypt and Libya and who had woolly hair – clearly the type that we today know by the name of “black” or “Negro” – and those who lived within the zone of the modern Iran and Pakistan – the so-called “Eastern, or Asiatic, branch” – and who were straight-haired; still a mystery for scholars, whose debate is focused on the question * Estefanía Alba Benito Lázaro and Sergio España-Chamorro, Departamento de Ciencias y Técnicas Historiográficas y Arqueología, Universidad Complutense de Madrid (UCM).

Thanks to Fabiola Salcedo Garcés and to her National Project funded by the Spanish Ministry of Science and Competitiveness “Proyecto Cartago: Iconografía Clásica y contacto cultural en el África romana: programas escultóricos en Cartago (Túnez)” (HAR 2011-23445).

of the possible identification – or confusion – of this kind of Ethiopians with the later Indi’.

Other terms used to describe black people in ancient literature – already in Roman texts – were niger, perniger, nigerrimus, fuscus, decolor and rubens. The difference between these words was, basically, the degree of darkness in the colour of the skin of the described person<sup>2</sup>.

Of course, the African provinces of the Roman Empire had more contact with black people than the other regions. They would not have been so common in the European provinces but even despite these scarce connections, there is sufficient information from the literature, visual art and hearsay to recognize and to know about them.

Their dark skin was the foremost ethnical difference comparing Aethiopes with the white Italians. But this difference, as it seems, was merely aesthetic and noted because its “scientific” interest, not implying psychological factors or elements of another class, at least not in the vast majority of the cases and following the most recent interpretations.

There are tens of literary references to this black population in the classical texts but the most clarifying of them all could be this one:

erat unica custos

Afra genus, tota patriam testante figura, torta comam labroque tumens et fusca colore, pectore lata, iacens mammis, compressior alvo, cruribus exilis, spatiosa prodiga planta.

Translation: «His solitary housekeeper was she, her nationality was African, and all her figure proves her native land. Her hair was curly, thick her lips, and dark her colour, wide was she across the chest, with hanging breasts, her belly more compressed, with slender legs, and large and spreading foot»<sup>3</sup>.

This text – as many others – just describes a black servant woman in a physical way. We have other texts where some authors speak about the intelligence and education of the Ethiopians, many times in a pretty positive and laudatory way<sup>4</sup>.

1. SNOWDEN (1947), pp. 268-9, note 7.

2. SNOWDEN (1970), pp. 1-14.

3. Moret., 31-35; translation on virgil.org, obtained from MOONEY (1916).

4. Especially in legendary texts, but with a lasting continuation through history. GRUEN (2011), pp. 201 and ff.

Iconography

African people in the iconography of the Classical Antiquity were represented mainly as slaves, warriors, entertainers and as dwarfs in Nilotic scenes. Most of the black people inhabiting Italy and Europe arrived there as a result of the commercial transactions between Italy and the African provinces, also in contact with the inner regions of the continent and the desert routes. In this sense, we find some representations of Negroes as simple slaves.

Maybe one of the most interesting topics was the iconographic type of the so-called negrillón. This was developed in the Hellenistic period and it was pretty popular in the Roman age. This category is defined by the representations of black children or youths as slaves in a servant situation.

For instance, we can ascribe the lampadarium of the Museo Nacional Arqueológico de Tarragona – which was found near the port of the ancient Tarraco – to this category. It has been interpreted as a black youth holding a tray to bear the necessary elements to light and make a lamp work. We find some lamps in the shape of heads of Ethiopians as well (FIG. 1).

The iconographic type of Blacks as slaves can be seen in another sense. For example, the Hellenistic sculpture of maybe a slave acting, supposedly, as a musician found in Chalons-sur-Saône (France) and now in the Cabinet des Médailles in Paris, shows to us the appreciation of the patricians for the educated and skilled Blacks. Playing music by the streets of the cities seems to have been a usual occupation for black people in Antiquity (FIG. 2).

We have other examples in the Galleria dei Candelieri at the Musei Vaticani, for example, the one which displays a young slave with a lekythos, and another sculpture in Adana.

To this category have been ascribed many sculptures of black children, like those we have mentioned. It is frequent to explain them as examples of slavery related to Ethiopians, but in some specific cases we do not have any proof of this status. We can find an example of this in the child with the dove at the Musée de Sousse (Tunis). We have another example of these children without proofs of their slavery status in Ostia, found at the Casggiato dei Molini. Here, the black youth wears over his tunic a sleeved cloak like a paenula to which is attached a hood (cucullus), a kind of visual indicator of relatively good social position (FIG. 3).

In the same line, we can also speak about the head of a black sculpture in bronze found in Limagne Auvergnate. It shows a black child represented in alexandrine style. Or another one in the Cabinet des Médailles in Paris. This is a balsamaire (a perfume vase) shaped like the head of an Ethiopian, in bronze (FIG. 4).

FIG. 1 Lampadarium representing a young black slave at the Museo Arqueológico Nacional de Tarragona (photo J. A. Remolà Vallverdú, Área de Colecciones, Documentación e Investigación of the Museo Nacional Arqueológico de Tarragona).

At the same time, we have many other examples of representations of slaves without being necessarily children. This sculpture was found in the thermae of Afrodiasias (Turkey) (FIG. 5).

Among other representations, we also find defeated warriors in the iconography. The problems with the Aethiopes and, in general, with black African populations in the southern frontier of the African Roman provinces could have been the inception for creating this kind of iconographic topic<sup>5</sup>. They are not so common as, for example, the Galatian and German types, perhaps because the war in Africa was not so intense and long as in those other regions. However, we can find some examples of these figures at the Musée du Bardo (Tunis), which owns two hermaic pillars in black schist from the thermae of Antonine in Carthage: one of them representing an

FIG. 2 Black musician from Chalons-sur-Saône, now at the Cabinet des Médailles of the Bibliothèque Nationale de France in Paris (Snowden, 1970, n. 60, pp. 84-5).

5. SNOWDEN (1947), p. 283, note 86 and ID. (1970), pp. 130-43 about the military contacts between Romans and Ethiopians in a broad sense.

FIG. 3 A small bust of a black youth from Ostia, at the Museo Ostiense (Snowden, 1970, n. 53, p. 80).

FIG. 4 Balsamaire in the shape of a head at the Cabinet des Médailles of the Bibliothèque Nationale de France in Paris (photo taken and edited by the authors).

actual Ethiopian and the other one interpreted as a portrait of a Libyan due to his special haircut. A similar model is kept at the Ashmolean Museum in Oxford, but it is currently regarded to as a mocking image<sup>6</sup>, maybe not representing in this case an enemy or a captive, as long as the treatment of the figure is totally different from that in the other two hermae. Another example of a defeated Ethiopian is the sculpture found in the Fayyūm, near Memphis, Egypt – now at the Musée du Louvre (FIGS. 6-7).

Culture contact

Greeks were the first – after the Egyptians, who were geographically much closer and so, more likely to establish these contacts – in coming to meet

6. GRUEN (2011), pp. 213 and ff.

FIG. 5 Balneator (or slave at the baths) found in Afrosidias and now at the Musée du Louvre in Paris (Snowden, 1970, n. 117, p. 251).

Ethiopians, and also their literature and their material evidences reflect these interactions – examples of them are, above all, the so-called plastic head vases, sometimes Janiform<sup>7</sup>, or some interesting depictions in painted amphorae or vases. Romans began to take fluent contact with black people essentially since the defeat of Carthage. After this, Africa was annexed as a province and dark-skinned people started more frequent and long-term relations with the Roman population, in some cases becoming Roman themselves and even reaching high social positions.

The contact between Blacks and Romans was continuous. Considering the textual and material sources we have, we cannot assume any kind of racism or discrimination on the basis of race and physical appearance for the Antiquity. The value of each person for their actions and their specific civic status was always more important than other factors in the definition of people. The colour of the skin was understood as a direct mark of identification and was clearly perceived, but it seems to have not had other implications which have probably been added to our mentality in later historical periods.

7. GRUEN (2011), pp. 216-9.

---

FIG. 6 Black prisoner with hands bound behind his back from the Fayyum, now at the Musée du Louvre in Paris (photo Wikimedia Commons).

---

FIG. 7 Herma with a head of Ethiopian at the Musée National du Bardo in Carthage (photo Wikimedia Commons).

Bibliography

- BEARDSLEY G. M. H. (1922), The Ethiopian in Greek and Roman Civilization, Baltimore.
- BEARDSLEY G. M. H. (1929), The Negro in Greek and Roman Civilization: A Study of the Ethiopian Type, Baltimore.
- DEMIREL E. (2005), Roman Depiction of the Aethiops Type in Literature and Artwork: An Excerpt from the Honors Thesis "Black and White in Ancient Rome: An Analysis of Four Influential Works on the Issue of Racism in Antiquity", «Inquiry. The Undergraduate Research Journal», t. VI [online], University of Arkansas.
- FRASER A. D. (1935), The Panoply of the Ethiopian Warrior, «AJA», t. XXXIX, 1 (Jan.-Mar.), pp. 35-45.
- GRUEN E. S. (2011), Rethinking the Other in Antiquity, Princeton.
- MOONEY J. J. (1916), The Minor Poems of Vergil: Comprising the Culex, Di-rae, Lydia, Moretum, Copa, Priapeia, and Catalepton, Birmingham.

SNOWDEN J. F. M. (1947), The Negro in Classical Italy, «AJPh», 68, 3, pp. 266-92.

SNOWDEN J. F. M. (1948), The Negro in Ancient Greece, «American Anthropologist, New Series», 50, 1, Part 1 (Jan.-Mar.), pp. 31-44.

SNOWDEN J. F. M. (1970), Blacks in Antiquity: Ethiopians in the Greco-Roman Experience, Cambridge.

THOMPSON L. A. (1989), Romans and Blacks, Oklahoma.

VERCOUTTER J., LECLANT J., SNOWDEN J. F. M., DESANGES J. (1976), The Image of the Black in Western Art, t. I. From the Pharaohs to the Fall of the Roman Empire, New York.